Headmaster conducts ceremony at Library Dedication.

October Alumni Day Enlivens Term; Parents Provide November Respite

Dedication

The dedication ceremony of the Merrill-Seamans Library and Alumni Homecoming made the fifteenth of October one of the high points of this term. Many alumni were on hand to see the dedication of the Library in the morning and the athletics in the afternoon.

At ten o'clock the school had assembled in front of the library to hear Mr. Curry begin the ceremony by delivering the invocation. Mr. Paul K. Fodder, the treasurer of the Board of Trustees and Vice-president of the First Agricultural Bank of Pittsfield, then gave the address. Mr. Fodder spoke basically of the library as a collection of the greatest minds of history which are now available to the school. He expressed the idea that the books of the library are able to transport the reader to the time of the author; the books are the embodiment of their creator.

Mr. Curry was next at the rostrum for the naming of the building. He spoke primarily of Mr. Merrill of whom most of the students knew very little.

Mrs. Seamans, speaking in acknowledgement of the memorial to her father, asked that the library be a place of enjoyment for the students. She added that she appreciated being a part of Lenox, for the school had been part of the life of her family.

Dr. Seamans then reminisced about his days at Lenox. He spoke of the rise of technology in this age and the ways in which the library could be beneficial to everyone.

The ceremony was closed by a benediction given by the Rev. Mr. R. S. S. Whitman, Rector of Trinity Church in Lenox.

Parents' Day

After seven long weeks of painful separation, students and their parents were reunited on the annual ritual appropriately named Parents' Day (appropriate, isn't it?). Parents flocked from various corners of the nation to see how their children were faring in the new atmosphere of an independent boarding school. The influx of people was accompanied by a commensurate influx of motor vehicles. Though the traffic was immense, the problem of parking was placed in the able hands of Mr. J. Arthur Howland (Gramps) who directly had the cars packed as adeptly as any Los Angeles commuter.

Parents first trekked over to Lawrence Hall where they were met by the smiling faces of the Friends of Lenox, a non-profit organization for the propagation of the school. After receiving a chrysanthemum for a nominal fee, Mom and Dad hopped in the family auto and drove up to that great big yellow building on the hill. Many parents were intrigued by the history behind the painting of the building yellow - others weren't.

The action was really fast in the morning, and, after many parents saw their sons' grades, the action was really swinging.

The morning was spent visiting masters, one after another, and then at twelve noon, the Headmaster met with parents behind closed doors at Thayer Hall. The subject of said conference is not known to this reporter but one can rest reasonably assured that it was about the school.

At twelve-thirty everyone flocked like sheep, hollow-eyed, to the gym where they hoped to gormandize. Some of the sheep were clipped by the extravagant prices; however, it was for a good cause. The market opened high but dropped (one of the waitresses tripped). Egg salad rose sharply due to intervention by brothers and sisters. Potato chips sold briskly. The market closed low as they ran out of food.

Choir Goes To The Road; Westfield Is The First Stop

On Sunday, November sixth, the choir, under the direction of Mr. Carl Fredericksen, made its first trip of the year to the Church of the Atonement in Westfield, Massachusetts. Leaving the school at seven-thirty, after an early breakfast, the choir began the hour-long bus ride from Lenox, which under normal circumstances is not unbearable, yet serious doubt arose as to whether or not Mr. Blanchard would be able to maneuver the bus on the dangerously slippery roads which were the result of the first "blizzard" of the season. Upon reaching Westfield, the choir received a warm welcome at the church where they were to sing two services of Holy Communion. Mr. Curry gave the sermon at both services.

When the services were over, everyone in the choir, and elsewhere, agreed that the second service went much better than the first, and it was an admirable start.

Between the two services, the parish served coffee and doughnuts while Mr. Blanchard spoke to a group of parishioners about his experiences this past summer with the Project Outreach group in Canada. After church, the choir was served lunch in the parish hall. For the first trip of the year all seemed to fare well and Mr. Fredericksen was pleased by the performance of the choir, but there is still a great deal of work to be done before the next trip, which will not be until after Christmas.

New Yearbook Staff Headed By Giddings As Editor - in - Chief

This year's Martin staff consists of some very enthusiastic and prolific members of the Sixth Form. Their colorful and imaginative ideas will undoubtedly produce a yearbook that will be read and reread, instead of collecting dust on the top shelf of the family library.

Heading the yearbook staff is Jeremy Giddings, who has been elected Editor-in-Chief. Jeremy has many duties other than the yearbook, such as those of a Prefect and Editor-in-Chief of the Pen & Scroll. It will be his job to organize the staff and to delegate various duties to the staff members in order to meet the deadlines.

John Cook and John Tackus combine as the co-literary editors. These two students rank high in

Upper Forms Host Simon's Rock, Emma Willard Here For Lowers; St. Agnes Entertains All

Simon's Rock

Amid hearty greetings from the Sixth Form Commons Room, thirty-four lovely denizens of Simon's Rock, the newest girls' school In-The-Berkshires, arrived for a dinner dance with the two upper forms of the school. After meeting their dates in the gym, the couples went to the dining room to enjoy the fine products of the culinary talents of Chef Roberts. Already, the boys from Lenox were discovering that the Rockettes had the knack of having fun and this set the pace for the rest of the memorable evening.

After checking out the library, the couples walked up to Schermerhorn where the dance was held. The music was provided by Carl and The Crescendos and soon the best dance of the year was underway. Although some school dances are dull affairs at best, this was definitely not one of these. The spirit was such that even "Yellow Submarine" was danced to - a most difficult feat for feet.

Although the dance was scheduled to end at ten o'clock, it was pushed forward to ten-thirty. The end finally came, but not without plans being made for another dance with "The Rock" in the winter term.

Emma Willard

On Saturday, the twenty-ninth of October, the Third and Fourth Forms welcomed Emma Willard School of Troy, New York, for dinner and an evening of dancing.

Arriving at the gym promptly at quarter to six, the girls were met by the devouring eyes of their dates. After satiating their optic nerves for twenty minutes, the first couple met, and the introductions were made.

Accompanying the girls to the dining hall for dinner were the critical eyes of the rest of the school. After a fine meal, the headmaster announced that due to the nature of the weather, the girls were to ride to the dance at Schermerhorn, and their dates were to walk. This separation allowed both the boys and the girls to compare notes and stylistics with their peers.

Upon arriving at Schermerhorn, the girls waited for their partners and eventually all were brought together again on the dance floor. Couples started dancing almost immediately, thanks to the tasteful disk jockeys, who were praised by all.

The evening too quickly drew to a close and before anyone knew it, they were walking up to the buses, which were outside of the chapel, where many abrupt goodbyes were made and many thankyous were given and received.

A Library Is Not A Home

The new library has provided facilities for study beyond comparison to any previous asset of the school. Reference materials cover everything from Camus and his humanist outlook to the complexities of the automotive engine. The classics collection, the result of many years of collection by the late Groton master, Fredrick J. DeVeau, is the most extensive in the area and contains many books no longer even in print. History too has its place on the shelves and there are sections dealing with philosophy, humanities, really, anything one may be interested in.

Aside from the literary aspects, the new building has the most modern equipment. There are carrels for individual study. In the near future there will be a tape system available for language studies, music appreciation, etc. On the luxurious side what one may refer to as the reading rooms of the library contain several padded chairs, yielding the ultimate in comfort and relaxation. Admittedly, there is a temptation to shed one's shoes and use the snuggly furniture for foot stools, beds, etc. There is also the magnetism of the resulting sensation which draws the student from outside . . . often caked with mud or whatever the day may bring. Let's face it though this isn't right. The library is not a hotel, a lounge, or the outdoorsman's retreat, it's a place for reading and study. One should use it as such. DWW

Responsibility: Lenox & The World

Responsibility is a term which is thrown about a great deal these days, and is more often than not misused.

Within the school, one would be responsible if he upheld the rules of the school. The student must learn to be liable for an infraction of the guidelines which the administration has set down for the conduct of the student.

In society, one is not tolerated if he cannot abide by the rules of his society; a responsible citizen is one who assumes the liability for misconduct and, therefore, does not wish any misconduct to occur.

The greatest responsibility of man is to all humanity and the ideals which preserve the human race. Racism is not a responsible outlook on life, for a racist neglects the greater part of mankind. Nationalism is not a blameworthy ideology, yet when it hinges on chauvinism, and the preservation of a nation and its forms of government becomes so paramount that other nations' systems are being infringed upon, then this is irresponsibility. Responsible mankind should not aim for the perfection of a myriad of political systems, but it should become a proponent of internationalism.

In assuming a responsible attitude here at Lenox, we can assume a responsible attitude towards our society and the world. JLG

Hinman Recalls Early Years; Curriculum Expansion Cited

When Mr. Hinman first came to Lenox in 1934, this was a college preparatory school; therefore, as he sees it, there has been no real change, for school is still college preparatory. He has seen tremendous growth in the school from approximately eighty-five boys to our present enrollment. Lenox's Senior Master has had the chance to watch the school expand and excel upon many different levels.

Mr. Hinman has watched the curriculum expand and delights in the fact that, owing to the system of sectioning courses, everyone is able to learn on his own particular level. A person is no longer restricted to a class which is geared to the slowest person; he is able, now, to take courses at his own level and, therefore, learn and understand more.

Mr. Hinman has also seen expansion in sports. At one time, football, hockey and baseball were offered, yet we now have numerous other areas of sports. This, too, gives each individual more of a chance to participate in his own interests. Mr. Hinman can recall winning games when our strength was in eighty-five students, and he is not surprised that now we are able to win on all our many different levels of play.

However, what Mr. Hinman feels delights any master the most is seeing alumni come back and realizing that, through Lenox's training, they have been prepared for life.

New National Holiday Proposed

Since the Industrial Revolution, America has suffered from industrialization and automation. As a result, A Typical American's working hours have been cut in half. This means he has more time on his hands. With all this extra time on his hands, mankind has begun a search to find ways to spend it. Today we have holidays for veterans, workers, Santa Claus, the Great Pumpkin, Pilgrims, etc. Everyone has, however, forgotten one day which would really make a great holiday—that is, Eastern Standard Eve, the night when everyone on the East Coast turns his clock back one hour from Daylight Saving Time to Standard Time.

Eastern Standard Eve, as it would be called, might even be better than New Year's Eve, after which it could be loosely styled. First of all, by having the climax of the festivities at two o'clock rather than twelve mid-night, everyone would have an extra two hours to celebrate. Then after the clocks had been turned back, everyone would have another extra hour to celebrate, and by the time two o'clock rolled around again, everyone would be all set to turn it back again.

The techniques of celebration would be more or less the same. Everyone could crowd onto Times Square and watch the workmen climb up on their ladders to reset the clock. As the appointed hour approached, everyone would gather together to sing that old favorite, "Time Is On My Side" and shout "It's About Time" to one another.

At home, everyone could turn on the tube and watch Guy Lombardo and his Canadian Mounties, live from the Coconut Grove. If Guy Lombardo didn't appeal to you, you could turn the switch to the Late Show and watch 'The Time Machine" or read excerpts from Hickory Dickory.

Unfortunately, it doesn't look as though anyone will really want Eastern Standard Eve but you can sleep well tonight knowing that mankind won't run out of holidays. JHT

HEAD DIGS 'NEW LANGUAGE'; PONDERS FREEDOM DEFINITION

At the National Conference on Education at Williston Academy in October, the subject was "Freedom Kills Whom?" It was a discussion centered around the problem of the "dropout" at the college level, and the working paper for the conference prepared by Eugene Wilson, Dean of Admissions at Amherst College, placed the blame on the secondary schools—for purposes of discussion.

The problem centered on the word "freedom" —lack of it, too much of it, etc. I found that discussion was hampered (as it is in most conferences) by a lack of definition. What do we mean by freedom? Is it lack of restraint? Does it mean dispensation from responsibility? What is freedom? I felt we never resolved this problem of definition, and that too many were talking in their own realms of concern. The conclusion? Most secondary school people blame the colleges for dropouts by granting too much freedom; the college people are sure that the secondary schools prepare their graduates for dropping out by giving too little freedom before college. Next year we will pick it up at the same point.

One area of interest to me was the general plea on the part of college representatives for more independent study, which we will be moving into now that we have the Merrill-Seamans Library.

At the triennial conference of the National Association of Episcopal Schools in Washington, D. C., in November, the theme was "Worship". Over seven hundred delegates gathered at the Sheraton-Park Hotel for this conference.

I was asked to lead a panel discussion on voluntary work camp projects, for what it has done in its "outreach program" over the past five summers is becoming known all over the nation, and a few other schools are engaged as we are in this field of education. Since all panels met at the same time, I was not able to hear those on curriculum, the problems of chaplains, etc.

The new part of the program this year was a demonstration service at the National Cathedral put on by the girls' choir of the Nathional Cathedral School for Girls. Following the service there were two sessions to discuss the service and the questions which it raised.

The reaction could be divided, I believe, into three parts. The highly intellectual schools were critical of the service; the middle group was somewhat discouraged as to how it could ever find the setting (cathedral, organ, musical director, etc.) or the ability to produce such a service; the third group was thrilled and excited by what they saw and heard knowing full well they could never achieve this.

I made the following observations from this conference:

1. It is interesting to note that those who are non-Anglicans often refuse to participate in prayer to the Christian God and his son, Jesus Christ, but when it came time to sing they are "with it".

2. There was much discussion about the use of folk tunes, guitars, etc., and here I thought that Lenox came right out on top with what it has been doing for the past two years.

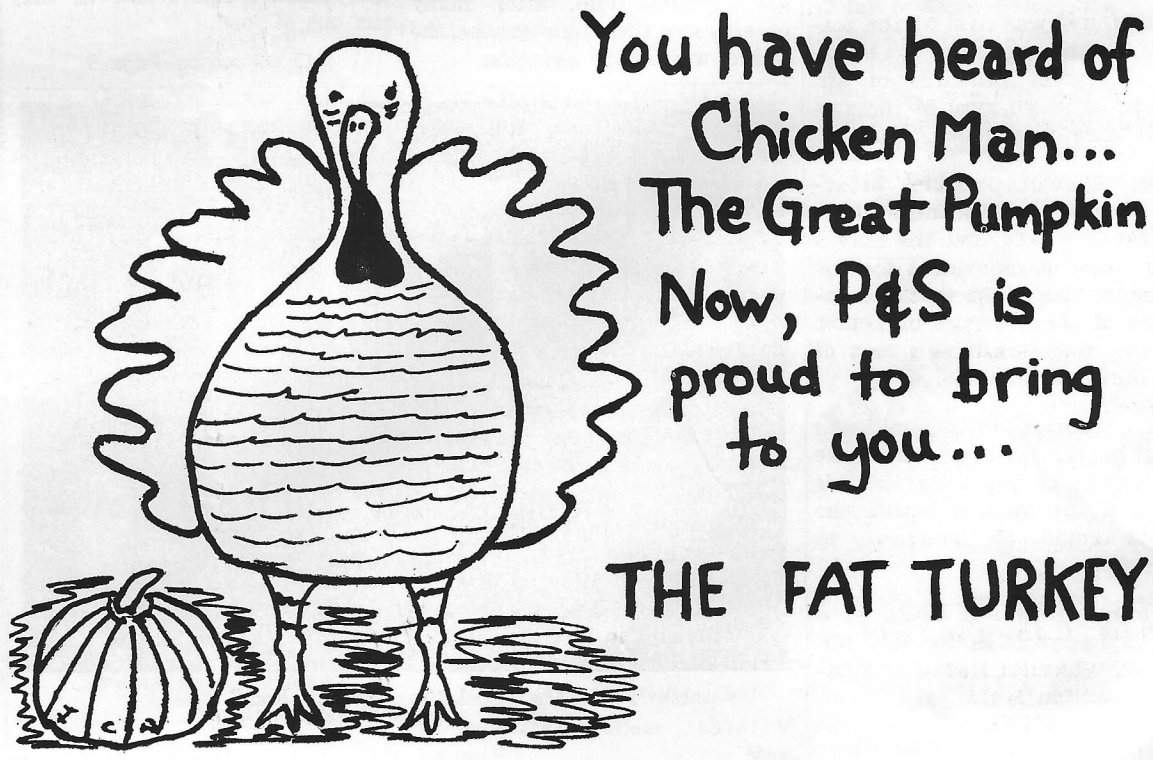

3. There were many suggestions about the use of the "new language" of the "beats" etc., and one of the nuns present knew all about "God is for Real, Man", "Are You Running with Me, Jesus?" and she played a fine guitar and knew all of the jazz mass records, etc. Some of the "new language" you will hear in chapel this year to vary the diet, but I am doubtful if it will last and replace for the next four hundred years the older versions with far richer lan-

Kesela moves downfield to set up a score.

Soccer's Finest Season Renders 10-1-1 Record

The Varsity Soccer team finished its season with a 10-1-1 record, surpassing any other in the history of the school. The team's only loss was in its third start at Gunnery where they were edged out, 1-0. Its final game at Monson ended in a double-overtime 2-2 tie.

After defeating the Darrow School 4-1 on their Parents' Day the Martins' season record to that date was 7-1.

The Martins stayed at home for the next three games. The first of their next opponents to be overwhelmed was cross-town rival Cranwell. Kesela, Sanneh, Albano, Covel and Hartshorn each tallied one goal to give the Gold a 5-1 victory. The boys from Marvelwood came to Lenox on Parents' Day with only one loss but were sent home with two. The Martin squad promptly tallied four goals, three by Captain Ken Lord and the other by Sidi Sanneh. In the Martins' final home stand, Watkinson was shut out on two goals by newcomer Steve Wilson and Paul Hartshorn.

In the Martins' last contest with a strong Monson squad, there was a deadlock tie. The Gold eleven came from behind to tie the score on goals by Deresse Kesela and Lo But-Yang. The game ended in a 2-2 tie after two overtime periods.

The Martins were strong in every position this season. With this and the spirit of the individuals, the season could have been nothing but a success. The strong defense of Mark Sinkinson and Rick Horton with Sidi Sanneh in the center stopped the opposition, which averaged less than one goal per game. The talents of Gordon Kunzelmann and Bob Martin in the goal added greatly to the defense. The forward line worked well as a unit with a lot of hustle on the part of the wings and insides.

The high scorers for the season were Ken Lord and center forward Deresse Kesela, each with ten goals. Paul Hartshorn and Jeff Covel each tallied four goals and the remaining were scattered among Sidi Sanneh, Steve Wilson, David Nathans, Jeronymo Bueno, Mark Sinkinson and Carl Albano.

The offense scored thirty-eight goals to the opposition's eleven with the help of the wing halfbacks Carl Albano and Darrell Shedd on key defense plays.

Captain's Column

This year's Varsity Soccer team has been heralded by many as the finest Lenox has ever developed. This international team, which includes three Africans, one Latin American, and two Orientals in its ranks, showed tremendous unity and spirit, though it was formed from such diverse ethnic groups.

The team, on the statistical side, outscored the other teams, thirty-eight goals to eleven. The individual skills of the team were fantastic, with such standouts as Kesela on the line, and Sanneh, Horton, and Sinkinson on defense.

However, these are not the major reasons why the team finished with a 10-1-1 season. Credit is due largely to Coach Rutledge, who makes Varsity Soccer a sport where one develops from his own desire to learn, with the major purpose being to enjoy the sport, and then from the enjoyment of playing good soccer comes the victories.

Another factor was the spirit of the team. This has been noticed in the entire school during the past season, especially exemplified by the rallies for football and soccer games.

The team developed desire to win which filled in where ability left off. This was a team, in all meanings of the word, a team which played good soccer and enjoyed it.

X-Country Ends Poorly; Wins Only One Meet

After beating Cranwell in their first meet, the Lenox Harriers went on to a very disappointing season, losing all seven of the remaining dual meets and finishing tenth out of twelve in the New Englands. The only other taste of victory came when Lenox finished second in the Berkshire County Run.

On October twelfth, Lenox ran at Hotchkiss. They were obviously outclassed as the best Lenox could place was Bob Beecher in fourth with the rest of the Hotchkiss team finishing before any more of the Lenox men, The score was 16-47.

The next meet was at Berkshire. Lenox again was well trounced by a score of 19-40. Bob Beecher, as usual, did a fine job for Lenox, finishing a full minute ahead of our next man.

Lenox was set back once more on their own course by Trinity-Pawling on October twenty-second. The score was 20-35.

Gunnery was next to beat Lenox by a score of 21-35. Again Beech was the lone Lenox standout, with a time of 13:52.

Travelling to Loomis for a triangular meet, Lenox was left without a chance, Brandt Keller and Paul Denzel having been hurt. The score, 21-47-69, indicates this.

At Williston, the best Lenox could do was Beecher in fourth place. Ed Griggs, a sophomore just off the injured list, finished second for Lenox. The score, a disappointing 17-35.

Lenox next traveled to the New Englands at Moses Brown School in Providence, R. I. The best time of the meet was 15:41. Beecher was thirteenth for the meet with a time of 16:29. The next Lenox runners were Griggs, forty-fifth, Dickinson, fifty-sixth, Leonardson, fifty-seventh, and Simpson sixty-first. Lenox finished tenth out of twelve.

On November eleventh, Lenox competed in the County Run at Cranwell and did a fine job, finishing second out of twelve. This time Cranwell beat Lenox, yet Lenox beat Berkshire. This was a reversal of the dual meets between the teams. Bob Beecher won a trophy for capturing third place in the meet.

In the last meet, the Lenox Harriers lost by a perfect score, 15-50, to a very powerful Mt. Hermon team. All of the Hermon men finished before the first Lenox man.

Unfortunately, again this year the team will lose many of its men. Captain Geoff Simpson, Paul Dickinson, Brant Keller, and Paul Denzel will graduate. Only first man Bob Beecher plus Ed Griggs and Greg Leonardson will be returning.

Shadowbrook Lecture On 'New Theology' Reviews Concepts

On the evening of Friday, October twenty-eighth, Mr. Hall took a group of six boys for the second in the fall series of lectures sponsored by Shadowbrook Seminary. The evening's speaker was the Jesuit priest Father J. Brown. Father Brown is on the faculty of the School of Theology at Boston College and has held a position at the Vatican in Rome.

The lecture was entitled "Contemporary Atheism". Father Brown discussed the contemporary "God is Dead" theology or the "New Theology", speaking especially about the concepts and beliefs of its most prominent spokesmen. He gave a brief outline of the objectives of these theologians, which are primarily to get rid of the myths in the Bible while updating the language. He also gave various meanings of leading a Christian life. Father Brown refrained from stating an opinion about the "New Theology" and presented his lecture in order to inform rather than to criticize.

The students who attended the lecture were very favorably impressed by Father Brown's easy-going manner of delivery. They gained much more knowledge and had a few misconceptions about "New Theology" cleared up, the truth about this subject and its chief spokesmen having been hidden in the current publicity and public debate.

The mob then stormed the athletic fields where varsity football faced Gunnery for its sixth straight win this season. Varsity soccer played Marvelwood and won, comme d'habitude.

After the games had ended, everyone hopped in their cars to visit one of the various culinary capitals of the Berkshires to enjoy ensuing epicurian delicacies. The parents then brought their sons back to their home-away-from-home and, as they stood by Route 7A, Mom and Dad drove off into the distance as the sun sank over Howland Field. Parents' Day, 1966, had ended.

guage than that which is stripped down to bare essentials.

4. Some of the comments from the "angry young chaplains" of some of our schools, made me think that we were trying hard to change the church to be the world, rather than getting the Church into the world, and there is a vast difference between the two.

I returned home with Thanksgiving for what we accomplish here, and the interest we have in being on the "cutting edge" to keep worship alive, and moving, and meaningful. We have our share of rebels and non-participants, but the overall response is, I suspect, far better than most in most schools from all I heard in the conference. We have much more to do and we shall be introducing some new forms in the course of the next year. RLC

Headmaster conducts ceremony at Library Dedication.

October Alumni Day Enlivens Term; Parents Provide November Respite

Dedication

The dedication ceremony of the Merrill-Seamans Library and Alumni Homecoming made the fifteenth of October one of the high points of this term. Many alumni were on hand to see the dedication of the Library in the morning and the athletics in the afternoon.

At ten o'clock the school had assembled in front of the library to hear Mr. Curry begin the ceremony by delivering the invocation. Mr. Paul K. Fodder, the treasurer of the Board of Trustees and Vice-president of the First Agricultural Bank of Pittsfield, then gave the address. Mr. Fodder spoke basically of the library as a collection of the greatest minds of history which are now available to the school. He expressed the idea that the books of the library are able to transport the reader to the time of the author; the books are the embodiment of their creator.

Mr. Curry was next at the rostrum for the naming of the building. He spoke primarily of Mr. Merrill of whom most of the students knew very little.

Mrs. Seamans, speaking in acknowledgement of the memorial to her father, asked that the library be a place of enjoyment for the students. She added that she appreciated being a part of Lenox, for the school had been part of the life of her family.

Dr. Seamans then reminisced about his days at Lenox. He spoke of the rise of technology in this age and the ways in which the library could be beneficial to everyone.

The ceremony was closed by a benediction given by the Rev. Mr. R. S. S. Whitman, Rector of Trinity Church in Lenox.

Parents' Day

After seven long weeks of painful separation, students and their parents were reunited on the annual ritual appropriately named Parents' Day (appropriate, isn't it?). Parents flocked from various corners of the nation to see how their children were faring in the new atmosphere of an independent boarding school. The influx of people was accompanied by a commensurate influx of motor vehicles. Though the traffic was immense, the problem of parking was placed in the able hands of Mr. J. Arthur Howland (Gramps) who directly had the cars packed as adeptly as any Los Angeles commuter.

Parents first trekked over to Lawrence Hall where they were met by the smiling faces of the Friends of Lenox, a non-profit organization for the propagation of the school. After receiving a chrysanthemum for a nominal fee, Mom and Dad hopped in the family auto and drove up to that great big yellow building on the hill. Many parents were intrigued by the history behind the painting of the building yellow - others weren't.

The action was really fast in the morning, and, after many parents saw their sons' grades, the action was really swinging.

The morning was spent visiting masters, one after another, and then at twelve noon, the Headmaster met with parents behind closed doors at Thayer Hall. The subject of said conference is not known to this reporter but one can rest reasonably assured that it was about the school.

At twelve-thirty everyone flocked like sheep, hollow-eyed, to the gym where they hoped to gormandize. Some of the sheep were clipped by the extravagant prices; however, it was for a good cause. The market opened high but dropped (one of the waitresses tripped). Egg salad rose sharply due to intervention by brothers and sisters. Potato chips sold briskly. The market closed low as they ran out of food.

Choir Goes To The Road; Westfield Is The First Stop

On Sunday, November sixth, the choir, under the direction of Mr. Carl Fredericksen, made its first trip of the year to the Church of the Atonement in Westfield, Massachusetts. Leaving the school at seven-thirty, after an early breakfast, the choir began the hour-long bus ride from Lenox, which under normal circumstances is not unbearable, yet serious doubt arose as to whether or not Mr. Blanchard would be able to maneuver the bus on the dangerously slippery roads which were the result of the first "blizzard" of the season. Upon reaching Westfield, the choir received a warm welcome at the church where they were to sing two services of Holy Communion. Mr. Curry gave the sermon at both services.

When the services were over, everyone in the choir, and elsewhere, agreed that the second service went much better than the first, and it was an admirable start.

Between the two services, the parish served coffee and doughnuts while Mr. Blanchard spoke to a group of parishioners about his experiences this past summer with the Project Outreach group in Canada. After church, the choir was served lunch in the parish hall. For the first trip of the year all seemed to fare well and Mr. Fredericksen was pleased by the performance of the choir, but there is still a great deal of work to be done before the next trip, which will not be until after Christmas.

New Yearbook Staff Headed By Giddings As Editor - in - Chief

This year's Martin staff consists of some very enthusiastic and prolific members of the Sixth Form. Their colorful and imaginative ideas will undoubtedly produce a yearbook that will be read and reread, instead of collecting dust on the top shelf of the family library.

Heading the yearbook staff is Jeremy Giddings, who has been elected Editor-in-Chief. Jeremy has many duties other than the yearbook, such as those of a Prefect and Editor-in-Chief of the Pen & Scroll. It will be his job to organize the staff and to delegate various duties to the staff members in order to meet the deadlines.

John Cook and John Tackus combine as the co-literary editors. These two students rank high in

Simon's Rock

Amid hearty greetings from the Sixth Form Commons Room, thirty-four lovely denizens of Simon's Rock, the newest girls' school In-The-Berkshires, arrived for a dinner dance with the two upper forms of the school. After meeting their dates in the gym, the couples went to the dining room to enjoy the fine products of the culinary talents of Chef Roberts. Already, the boys from Lenox were discovering that the Rockettes had the knack of having fun and this set the pace for the rest of the memorable evening.

After checking out the library, the couples walked up to Schermerhorn where the dance was held. The music was provided by Carl and The Crescendos and soon the best dance of the year was underway. Although some school dances are dull affairs at best, this was definitely not one of these. The spirit was such that even "Yellow Submarine" was danced to - a most difficult feat for feet.

Although the dance was scheduled to end at ten o'clock, it was pushed forward to ten-thirty. The end finally came, but not without plans being made for another dance with "The Rock" in the winter term.

Emma Willard

On Saturday, the twenty-ninth of October, the Third and Fourth Forms welcomed Emma Willard School of Troy, New York, for dinner and an evening of dancing.

Arriving at the gym promptly at quarter to six, the girls were met by the devouring eyes of their dates. After satiating their optic nerves for twenty minutes, the first couple met, and the introductions were made.

Accompanying the girls to the dining hall for dinner were the critical eyes of the rest of the school. After a fine meal, the headmaster announced that due to the nature of the weather, the girls were to ride to the dance at Schermerhorn, and their dates were to walk. This separation allowed both the boys and the girls to compare notes and stylistics with their peers.

Upon arriving at Schermerhorn, the girls waited for their partners and eventually all were brought together again on the dance floor. Couples started dancing almost immediately, thanks to the tasteful disk jockeys, who were praised by all.

The evening too quickly drew to a close and before anyone knew it, they were walking up to the buses, which were outside of the chapel, where many abrupt goodbyes were made and many thankyous were given and received.
